Q: Git-svn pull-up script to generate a README.txt file
I am currently learning Git and I am loving it, but I need help with something I have already created. I'm currently developing an application in Java, I have created a README.txt file using notepad++, I have already committed the file into the repository and I want to use a git script to read the file and generate a README.txt file in the root directory. The code I have found to do this is here: I copied this code into a bash script called git-up.sh. This is the script I have so far: `#!/bin/bash # get the branch name we'll be working on BRANCH="$(git rev-parse --abbrev-ref HEAD)" # if the branch does not exist, fail if [[$BRANCH = '???']]; then echo "ERROR: no branch named '$BRANCH' exists" exit 1 fi # otherwise, clone the repo git clone # switch to the branch we're` about to work on cd. # build out the new README.txt in the root directory echo $(sed -e "s/^/version: /" README.txt) > README.txt # commit the new README.txt to the repository git add README.txt # save the HEAD position in the repository git commit -m "Added README.txt" # switch back to the original branch cd.. exit 0 The script is saving the current commit in the README.txt file but I also need it to pull in all the newer commits to my current branch and save them in the README.txt file. Does anyone have any idea what I need to include in my script to make the pull-up script work? Many thanks in advance!

A: You can just do a git checkout $BRANCH before you put the code you have there.

Antifungal and antibacterial activities of the essential oil obtained from Stevia rebaudiana Bertoni (Asteraceae). The plant Stevia rebaudiana Bertoni produces a sweet steviol glycoside called stevioside which is bioactive and very attractive to pharmaceutical companies. The influence of the biological activities of the essential oil obtained by steam distillation from leaves, stems, and roots of Stevia rebaudiana has been demonstrated, but not investigated using the agar diffusion method. The objective of this study was to evaluate the antifungal and antibacterial activities of the essential oil against the fungus Candida albicans and the bacteria Staphylococcus aureus, Escherichia coli, and Bacillus subtilis. The antifungal activity of the essential oil was tested in disc-diffusion assay with 1% of the essential oil in methanol (v/v) added to yeast culture in Sabouraud broth medium or on Sabouraud dextrose agar medium. Streptomycin was used as control. The antibacterial activity was determined using the agar dilution method with the essential oil added to culture broth. Vancomycin and ciprofloxacin were used as controls. The essential oil showed antifungal activity against C. albicans, Bacillus subtilis, and S. aureus, with minimum inhibitory concentration between 32 and 64 microg/mL. The essential oil did not interfere with the antibacterial activity of the antibiotics against the tested bacteria. The results showed the antifungal activity of the essential oil from Stevia rebaudiana Bertoni and the potential to be useful in pharmaceutical and food industries.
