We know what really happens behind the scenes at these top art schools. And beyond their walls even more than they can be aware of. An eye-opening expose of a colorful and complex world that is much less revealed to outsiders than it should be. In Generation Art Gangs, philanthropist Don Spoto transforms the private and public lives of top art institutions, revealing a world of bribery, payoffs, sex and decadent drug use. He explores how these institutions are struggling to come to grips with scandals, greed, power struggles and court cases. Generations of artist-managers, including David Hockney, Jeff Koons and Robert Motherwell have come and gone as

Both Walmart and Sobeys Inc. plan to release mobile apps for shoppers to use in their stores within weeks that allow people to pay for purchases at checkout stands, avoid the long checkout lines and save time. Walmart started testing the app in stores in the U.S. last year and plans to roll it out in Canadian stores by the end of January, said Dan Bartlett, spokesman for Walmart Canada. Story continues below advertisement When the app is ready, shoppers will be able to use their phones to scan items' bar codes. If the app identifies the items, the store will then put the items into a virtual cart for them to add as they go through a checkout line. Shoppers will not have to check out of the store and go directly to the cashier window. They will then get a receipt via email that will appear as a text on their phone. Bartlett said Walmart wants to show all transactions before the item leaves the store, and there won't be a paper receipt. "It's designed to be a really seamless experience and really show the value of having the product in the store," Bartlett said. 1cdb36666d
